Hi there,

A few weeks ago I mentioned the return of music festivals and events - and WOW have the opportunities been growing in size and number! LA is going to be kicking off the cobwebs of Covid by lighting up our music scene with the upcoming BET Awards with the top A-list talent flocking to attend pre-event record label weekend house party events, album launch parties and the awards themselves.

Which means... last minute sponsorship opportunities exist for brands who want to kick off their summer to fans/consumers very eager to engage again with pop culture after a year of no events. These partnerships can yield massive media outlet and social media coverage - and get brands in front of those trend setting artists. Interested in finding out about upcoming options? Shoot me a note and we'll share opportunities! And now on to our weekly blog recap...

Brand Commercials That Re-Wrote Popular Songs

By Allie Duke, June 9, 2021 at 7:30 AM

Why Your Company Should Consider This Advertising Strategy

If you've been watching TV lately, you may have seen the new Cheetos commercial featuring Mila Kunis and her husband, Ashton Kutcher. In the commercial, Kutcher sings custom lyrics from Shaggy's hit song; "It Wasn't Me," about how he has repeatedly "caught" Kunis eating all of the Cheetos in different locations of their house.

Shaggy even makes a guest appearance in the extended version of the commercial to tie it all together. The commercial brings together one of Hollywood's biggest power couples, a favorite snack among Americans, and an "oldie but a goodie" song from the 2000s. This isn't the first time a brand commercial has re-written the lyrics to a popular song, nor will it be the last. This advertising strategy not only boosts sales, but it also aligns the brand with specific audiences who may be fans of the song. In this blog, Hollywood Branded will look at how songs became important parts of commercials, examples of other brands who re-wrote songs, and how your brand can take advantage of this beneficial, advertising strategy.
